TEXT 1 – ONLINE INFORMATION

How to Check Online Information

Students use the internet every day to find information for school and personal interests. However, not all information online is reliable. Some websites may contain incorrect, incomplete, or misleading information.

Before trusting an online source, students should check several things. First, they should look at who published the information. A trustworthy organization, school, or official institution is usually more reliable. Second, students should check whether the article provides clear facts and evidence. They should also check the date because old information may no longer be accurate.

Students should be careful when information makes them very emotional. Instead of sharing it immediately, they should stop and check the source and the facts. Comparing information from several reliable sources can also help students decide whether the information is trustworthy.

- Which two signs show that an online source is reliable?
 - It comes from a trustworthy source.
 - It provides clear facts and evidence.
 - It has many colorful pictures.
 - It is shared by many people.
- What should students do before sharing information online?
 - Share it immediately with their friends.
 - Check the source, date, and information carefully.
 - Change the information to make it more interesting.
 - Only read the title of the article.
- What is the main idea of paragraph 2?
 - Students should stop using social media.
 - Students need to check several things before trusting information.
 - Health articles are always more important than other articles.
 - Old information is always false.
- What should we do first after reading online information that makes us emotional?
 - Share it immediately.
 - Write an angry comment.
 - Check the source and information carefully.
 - Ask our friends to share it.
- The word “reliable” in the text is closest in meaning to
 - trustworthy

- B. interesting
- C. popular
- D. emotional

TEXT 2 – STUDENT LIFE

My First Week at the School Dormitory

My name is Rania. This year, I started studying at a new school and stayed in the school dormitory. At first, I thought living in a dormitory would be boring and uncomfortable because I had never lived away from my family before.

My daily schedule was quite organized. I woke up at 5 a.m. and prepared for the morning activities. After breakfast, I went to class. In the afternoon, I studied with my friends. In the evening, I usually reviewed my lessons and prepared my school materials for the next day.

At first, I missed my family very much. However, my roommates were kind and helpful. They showed me around the dormitory and helped me understand the daily schedule. After several days, I became more comfortable.

Now, I enjoy living in the dormitory because I have learned to be independent, responsible, and organized.
